

Californians Pay More Federal Taxes Than Nation In 1933-34

California citizens paid $4,235,000,000 in taxes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, a figure almost twice that of the preceding year and approximately four times the total of tax collections in this state during the pre-war year 1940-41.

Report covering federal, state and local tax collections for the past fiscal year, made by the tax department of the California State Chamber of Commerce, was made public today by Harrison S. Robinson, president.

This study reveals that the federal government last year collected $3,372,000,000 in California, of which $1,950,000,000 consisted of individual income taxes. For the preceding fiscal year, individual income tax collections were $480,400,000. This four-fold increase in individual income tax collections by the federal government, Robinson pointed out, is the result of changes in the 1942 Federal Revenue Act, which broadened this segment of the tax base to include almost 50,000,000 taxpayers throughout the nation.

It is significant, Robinson stated, that Californians are now paying more in federal taxes than the entire nation paid as recently as the year 1933-34, when total collections in the United States amounted to $3,116,000,000. This increase, he said, reflects the contribution this state is making directly toward financing the cost of the war.

In the case of state taxes, collections from all sources for the last fiscal year were $545,600,000, exceeding the 1942-43 yield of $490,600,000. This is explained by the fact that war activity has caused an unprecedented increase in business activity, Robinson said, and for the most part state taxes are geared directly to the flow of business.

Local property tax levies by counties, cities, school districts and special districts amounting to $316,000,000 during the last fiscal year were less than the $320,000,000 collected during the preceding year, due principally to curtailment of levies for charities and welfare.
